Re Item V

Reasoned statement with regard to novelty, inventive step or industrial applicability;
citations and explanations supporting such statement

Reference is made to the following document:

D1: US 6 625 021 B1

D2: US 2004 004676 A

D3: US 2003 063247 A

1. The present application does not meet the criteria of Article 33(1) PCT, because the subject-matter of claim 1 is not novel in the sense of Article 33(2) PCT.

The document D1 discloses (the references in parentheses applying to this document):

a clamping spring (10), comprising a sheet of resilient material (column 3, lines 15-19) having an interconnected plurality of alternating first and second tab disposed around the periphery thereof, the first tabs (26, 28) being angled upwardly and having mounting slots (14) therein, the second tabs (18) being angled downwardly; whereby force applied to the first tabs provides a consistent controlled clamping force at the second tabs.

It is to be mentioned that the formulation "... for a microdisplay..." has to be interpreted as "...suitable for a microdisplay ..." (see PCT Guidelines 5.21 and 5.23). Although no microdisplay is explicitly disclosed in D1, it is clear that the clamping spring of D1 is suitable for use with a microdisplay.

2. Dependent claims 2-4 do not contain any features which, in combination with the features of any claim to which they refer, meet the requirements of the PCT in respect of novelty, see document D1 and the corresponding passages cited in the search report.

3. The subject-matter of claims 5-13 does not appear to be disclosed or suggested by the available prior art.

None of the documents cited in the search report (D1-D3) discloses shoulder bolts having apertures extending along the axes of the bolts and used together with a clamping spring for fixation of a microdisplay. The problem solved by the solution specified in claim 5 and 11 is that of fixing a microdisplay during its adjustment. The only document directed to this problem is D2 which delivers a solution different to that of the application. Hence, a skilled person is not led to a solution according to claims 5 or 11.
